Did you know?

Lavandin is steam distilled from the flowering tops of this hybrid plant, developed by crossing True Lavender (Lavendula angustifolia) with Spike Lavender (Lavendula latifolia). The essential oil yield of the plant is extremely high compared to True Lavender and it is widely cultivated as well as growing wild, especially in the South of France. The high yield makes it much cheaper to produce than true lavender and is produced in much higher volumes.

The presence of Spike Lavender gives Lavandin a more camphoraceous and penetrating aroma than True Lavender. Those looking for an aroma reminiscent of English garden lavender may well prefer Lavandin.

Lavandin is widely used to replace Lavender by the perfume and cosmetics industries.
